The bathroom is where you start your day and the window to your personality as you meet all the people in your life. Since bathes are becoming more of a focal point, they don't serve as a "function only room" but rather a room to be enjoyed as an escape from reality.

If you spend a lot of time in the bath, incorporate such items as a towel-warming bar or a television to create a more enjoyable retreat. Another new item that can be installed in the floor is an element to heat your tile with a wire underlayment.

While luxury is important, comfort should be first consideration when planning your own personal place to escape. Your bathtub can be made more relaxing by incorporating a deeper or wider one with whirlpool jets, headrests, downspouts that are like your own waterfall and music that is piped in from another part of the house. Important note...old tubs can be made to do all of these things too!

If you don't have room, you can create a more open feeling with better utilization of space like taking out a wall or raising the tub to make it appear sunken.
